

Overview of the United Nations

Cleveland Council on WORLD AFFAIRS

THE UNITED NATIONS

To be truly successful as a Model UN delegate, you must first have a strong understanding of the United Nations system, as well as its history, structure, and operations. Having a strong understanding of the bodies within the UN system and the types of documents and recommendations that committees make is essential for ensuring that your ideas will be communicated in a way that is realistic and most closely resembles diplomatic work at the United Nations.

This section will provide delegates with a basic understanding of the United Nations System and its principal organs. Please also use your individual Committee Background Guide to gain further understanding of your committee structure and mandate.

At its core, the United Nations was designed to serve as a forum through which the nations of the world can solve international issues in a collective and peaceful way. The UN is an Intergovernmental Organization (IGO) and one of many to operate in the world today. With the broadest mandate and near-universal membership for the world's states, the UN has the ability not only to coordinate and promote cooperation between member states, but also other IGOs as well. Referred to as specialized agencies, these organizations are politically and structurally independent of the UN but have entered into cooperative agreements with the UN. Some well-known specialized agencies include the International Criminal Court, the World Health Organization, and the World Bank. While these specialized agencies are a part of what is referred to as "the UN system," they are entirely independent organizations, with their own charters, procedures, mandates, financial structures, and memberships.

As illustrated in the graphic above, the United Nations is composed of six principal organs, which include the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council, the Secretariat, the International Court of Justice, and the Trusteeship Council, which is now inactive. Each of these organs is tasked with their area of responsibility.

Additionally, the General Assembly, the Security Council, and the Economic and Social Council have the capacity to create subsidiary bodies to assist in specified areas. These subsidiary bodies act under the auspices of their parent organ, providing specialized expertise on specific topics and recommendations to the principal body for action. These bodies are often created and dissolved at the will of the principal organs in relation to their changing agendas.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY (GA)

The General Assembly is the main organ of the United Nations. Comprised of six deliberative bodies, all states that are members of the United Nations (Member States) are represented; each has one vote in accordance with the principle of sovereign equality. The duties of the General Assembly consist mainly of the peaceful settlement of disputes, the establishment of international law, economic and social development, addressing issues of human rights, and the maintenance of international peace and security in matters that are not under consideration by the Security Council – or “on the agenda” of the Security Council. The General Assembly further elects the non-permanent members of the Security Council, the members of ECOSOC, the Secretary General, and the Justices of the International Court of Justice.

SECURITY COUNCIL (UNSC)

The Security Council is charged solely with the maintenance and enforcement of international peace and security. It is composed of fifteen Member States, of which five are permanent and ten are elected by the General Assembly for two-year terms. The five permanent members are China, France, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom, and the United States of America, all of which have the exclusive right to veto any substantive matter proposed by the Council with a single dissenting vote, causing the resolution to fail. While resolutions passed by other United Nations bodies take the form of recommendations, resolutions passed by the Security Council have binding power over Member States.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL (ECOSOC)

The Economic and Social Council holds authority for the economic and social issues of the United Nations. The Council is composed of 52 Member States, each elected by the General Assembly for three-year terms. ECOSOC oversees a number of specialized agencies, programs, and funds within the UN systems well as coordinates activities among these agencies and outside organizations working in cooperation.

SECRETARIAT

The Secretariat forms the administrative arm of the United Nations. Headed by the Secretary General, the Secretariat works to support the work of the various organs and committees by providing research, data, guidance, and expertise on the issues under consideration.

INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE (ICJ)

The International Court of Justice is the primary judicial branch of the United Nations. Composed of 15 judges elected by the General Assembly for nine-year terms, the ICJ is tasked with settling legal disputes submitted by states in accordance with existing international law. Additionally, the ICJ may provide advisory opinions regarding questions of international law.

COMMITTEE MANDATES, STRUCTURES, FUNCTIONS, AND MEMBERSHIP

To be an effective delegate, it is helpful to have a thorough understanding of your particular committee's mandate, history, structure, and function. In addition to this guide, Background Guides will be published on the CCWA website for each committee and topic represented at the conference. While these guides outline the general information about the committee and the topics under discussion, these are only to be a STARTING POINT to your research on the committee.

Throughout the conference, unexpected updates and topics will arise. The more research you do on your committee and country, the better equipped you will be to address these.

As a delegate, you should have a thorough understanding of your committee's governing structure, functions, membership, history, mandate, and powers. It is also vital to know about topics discussed in recent sessions and current items on the committee's agenda. This will assist you immensely by forcing you to structure your arguments in a way that is consistent with reality.

The committee's website is one of your most important tools. This will provide access to past actions taken by the committee, shedding light on its powers, mandates, and the ways in which it addresses issues. Through your research into your committee, you should focus on your committee's founding documents, its evolution over time, and any documents that detail its specific responsibilities in the UN system.